MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

The Examiner; July 28, 1866; 3052; British Periodicals pg. 468

Mr. Walpole's Little Revolution.

[From a Correspondent.]

The attempt to break up the present state of things, to do which has been the avowed object of Mr. Walpole's policy for years, was not made with a view to upset the existing system, but to substitute a better one. The course of events has shown that this is impossible, and that the only alternative is to continue the present system. The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.

MR WALPOLE'S LITTLE REVOLUTION.

[From a Correspondent.]

The policy of Mr. Walpole has been to endeavour to conciliate the various parties, and to reconcile them to the existing state of things. He has succeeded in this, and the country is now more content with the present system than ever before.